Dear Anderson Cooper:

How is it that... you feel competent to “tell stories from many points of view” as your show claims? How does that not immediately give a bias before the show has even aired? This isn’t “keeping them honest,” it’s being a bully. And not only that, you’re being a bully just so you can get better ratings.

You know what else these shows do? They strain families when family members of Scientologists freak out about what you show. If this doesn’t violate our First Amendment rights, I don’t know what does.

Maybe, God help you, you think you’re doing the right thing. But far more appropriately you’ve had at least some doubt about your show and have quashed it. Whatever research you think you have done, you have no idea what Scientology is. Every time you talk about Scientology on your show, you prove that. I am a veteran Sea Organization member with more than 20 years service and I can tell you, you’re clueless. You have no idea what a Scientologist is. And if you don’t understand Scientology, you can’t begin to comprehend the Sea Organization.

And you never will, unless you drop your existing ideas that we are inferior to you and your friends because we have beliefs that you refuse to even try to understand and we must therefore be wrong.

S.B.
